NAWI Introduces New Crate Sorting Line for the Fresh Produce Industry
The new line processes 3000 crates per hour.

NAWI, the producer of logistic solutions, slaughter lines and cutting lines for the international food industry has installed their new sorting line at a vegetable cutting firm. This sorting line is able to sort 3000 crates of cut vegetables per hour at branch level.

Short Lead Times
Due to its high speed, lead times are shorter. This provides an increase in flexibility for companies in the fresh produce industry. This sorting line enables the industry to respond more quickly to the orders received from retailers.

Cost Savings
Achieving more volume with fewer people. The payback period is less than two years. In addition, retailers can reduce their logistic costs, as cross docking can be employed.

Suitable for Hygiene-Sensitive Environments
"In the fresh produce industry there is a growing demand for logistic solutions for high capacities. Solutions that can take heavy loads and can be applied in hygiene-sensitive environments. In addition to our famous aorta concept for the supply and removal of crates to/from packaging lines, this new sorting line also allows us to meet these specific market requirements," according to Alfred Klunder, Sales Director at NAWI.
